Gently Whispering the Circle Back (DVD and Facilitator Guide)

Gently Whispering the Circle Back (49:13 min) shares personal stories of survivors, children of survivors and allies in exploring the wounds inflicted through colonization and residential schools. Many people are either unaware of this Canadian history or they have an incomplete picture or haven't heard the story from the people who were there. This film shows, in a respectful way, the impact of this history along with the power of transformation that occurs when we all become part of the healing circle.

FACILITATOR GUIDE

The manual facilitates safe and structured opportunities for understanding the past and present impacts of these events; and to create a context in which respectful relationships can be restored between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples through the unfolding of four phases of recovery.

Indigenous Social Work Practice:

Creating Good Relationships

This book offers unique perspectives of MSW graduates with prior experience working in Aboriginal communities. They were able to examine Western social work and Aboriginal healing practices for their value in addressing issues such as colonization, trauma, addictions, and parenting. Binding all the chapters together is a theme of relational accountability, a sense of responsible connectedness to the people and the land, to the past and the future, to all of Creation. Indeed, the worker/client relationship is presented here as one instance of a more comprehensive and responsible relationship with all things.

This PARENTING RESOURCE was developed to help connect Indigenous families to traditional teachings which support behaviors that promote attachment with their babies. This was created in conjunction with a SERVICE PROVIDER RESOURCE which discusses the brain science behind each teaching. This discussion shows how traditional child rearing practices promote attachment from a neurobiological perspective
